

Nippy's Optimises their packaging operations ready for growth

Adelaide, 10th November 2018: Nippy's, the iconic South Australian beverage brand has partnered with Ailytic to manage and improve operational performance at its Moorook facility in South Australia. The team has implemented IIoT sensors and smart factory software enabling real-time monitoring and control of KPI's such as Availability, Performance, Downtime, OEE and Efficiency to assist management in driving efficiency and productivity gains.

Julian Martin, Operations Manager for the Riverland, South Australia facility said, "Nippy's has invested heavily in the Riverland, most recently with a major expansion to our well known UHT, Juice and Milk businesses incorporating state of the art packaging lines. To best leverage that investment, we decided to partner with Ailytic to implement the Worximity line performance monitoring system helping us to increase performance, customer service and quality". "Staff and Management can now view in real time, all the metrics of the operation, on any device with instantaneous feedback and notifications about how the site is performing" said Julian.

James Balzary, CEO of Ailytic in Adelaide said "we were amazed at how accepting the team were of a new technology which is testament to the eagerness of Nippy's to continuously improve ". "Manufacturers can purchase, configure and spin up an Industrial Internet of Things solution such as TileBoard with very little effort, and a lot of thought has gone into how that capability is embedded and sustained with an intuitive user experience".

"Understanding the causes for KPI's such as downtime, availability, efficiency and overall equipment effectiveness (OEE) can facilitate a continuous improvement culture in any organisation where physical assets such as bottling lines are in operation" said James. "Our goal is to help improve companies like Nippy's with decision systems and schedule optimisation applications that make a real impact to the bottom line".
